CALL FOR JOURNAL ARTICLES The Middle Ground Journal Ongoing Forum on:

Philosophy and the World

Editors: Dr. Ashley Dressel and Dr. Hong-Ming Liang

The Middle Ground Journal welcomes philosophical work on topics that may be of interest to both philosophers and to those working in the areas of world history and global studies. Such work includes, but is not limited to, work in the history of philosophy, work on global issues in the areas of political philosophy, normative theory, or applied ethics, and work on specific topics like global justice, globalization, multiculturalism, transnationality, and cosmopolitanism. We also welcome articles on teaching philosophy, the pedagogical uses of philosophy in the classroom, and philosophy as an academic discipline, particularly as they relate to multiculturalism, globalization, and so forth.

Please study the submission guidelines before submitting, see <http://www2.css.edu/app/depts/HIS/historyjournal/index.cfm?cat=4&art=15> Submissions should be sent to the forum's Coordinating Editor Dr. Dressel at adressell@css.edu, and the Chief Editor, Dr. Liang, hliang@css.edu

This on-going forum will consist of two primary types of contributions:

- Articles (5,000-7,000 words)
- Book Reviews (800-1,000 words)

For articles: please send max. 300-word abstracts, together with one-page CVs, to the Coordinating Editor Dr. Dressel at adressell@css.edu and Chief Editor Dr. Liang at hliang@css.edu. For book reviews please send max. 150-word abstracts, together with one-page CVs, to both editors.

The Middle Ground Journal is an open-access, refereed journal of world history and global studies housed at The College of St. Scholastica and published by the Midwest World History Association (MWWHA). We do not charge fees any type to our authors, readers and reviewers. Additional information on the journal is available at: <https://www.facebook.com/middlegroundjournal> and at: <http://www2.css.edu/app/depts/HIS/historyjournal/index.cfm>
